

01 / CALM · ESTABLISHED · UNDERSTATED

Classic club

A polished, traditional club feel without looking old-fashioned.

The look

Forest green and ivory, elegant serif headings, fine borders and an arched court photograph.

The layout

A balanced text-and-photo opening, a quiet facts strip, an editorial three-column play section and an airy gallery.

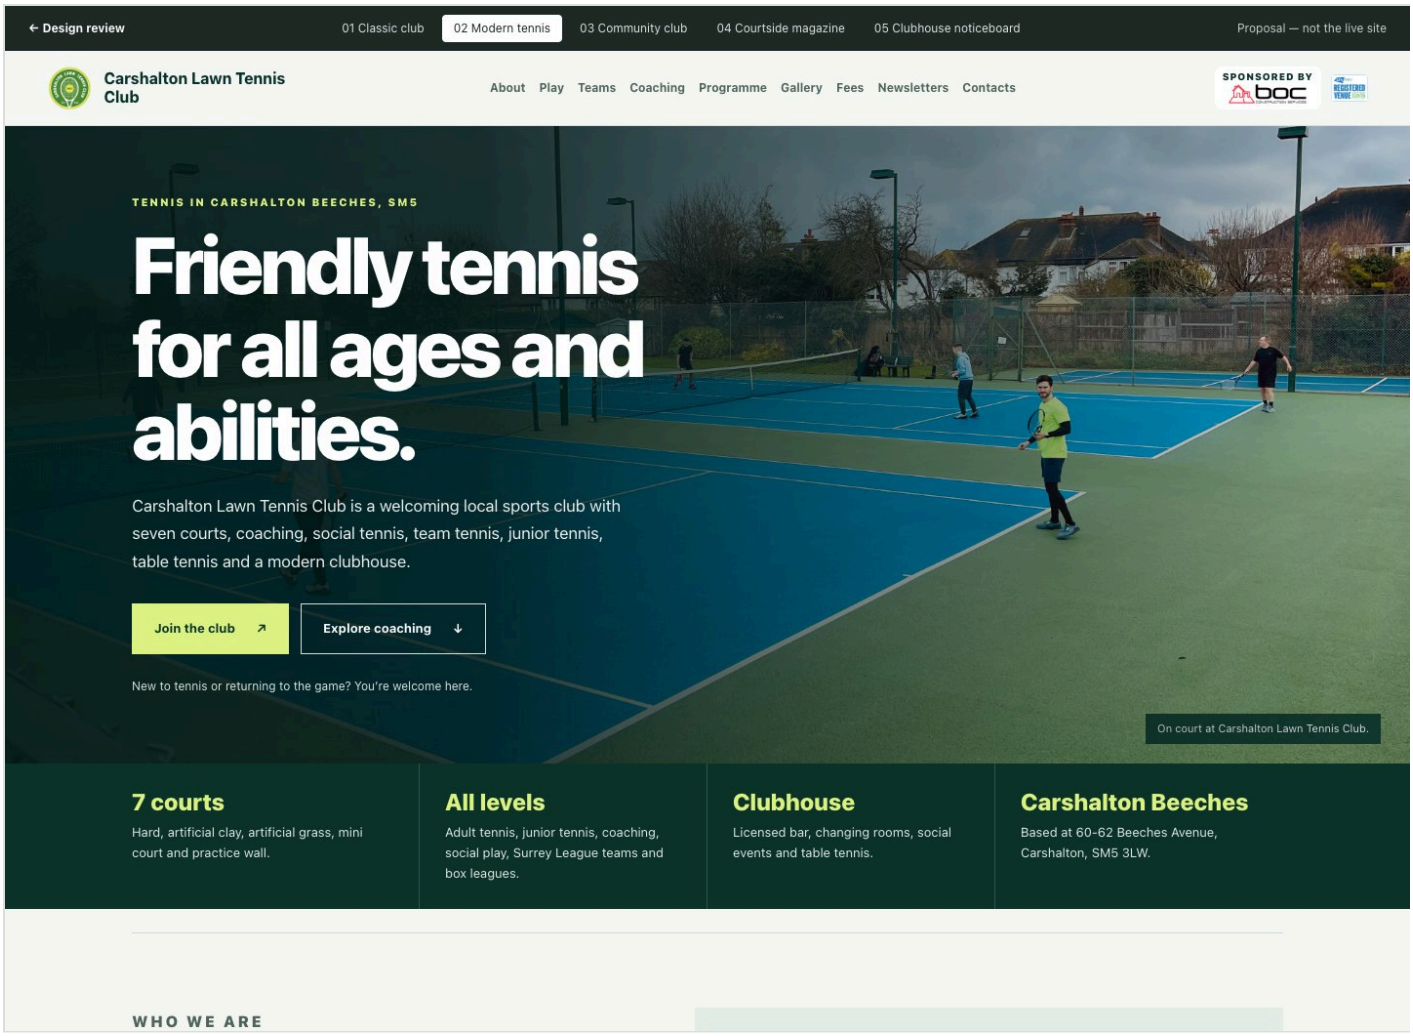

Best if we want...

A timeless, reassuring identity with the information and club character doing the talking.

Trade-off

More restrained: less immediate sporting energy than the modern option.

For discussion: Does this feel welcoming and established, or too formal? What would you keep or change?

02 / BOLD · ENERGETIC · PHOTO-LED

Modern tennis

A confident, sportier homepage that puts being on court first.

The look

Deep green, tennis-ball lime, bold sans-serif headings and a full-width photographic opening.

The layout

An immersive hero, dark facts band, numbered play cards, a feature-image gallery and a high-contrast newsletter panel.

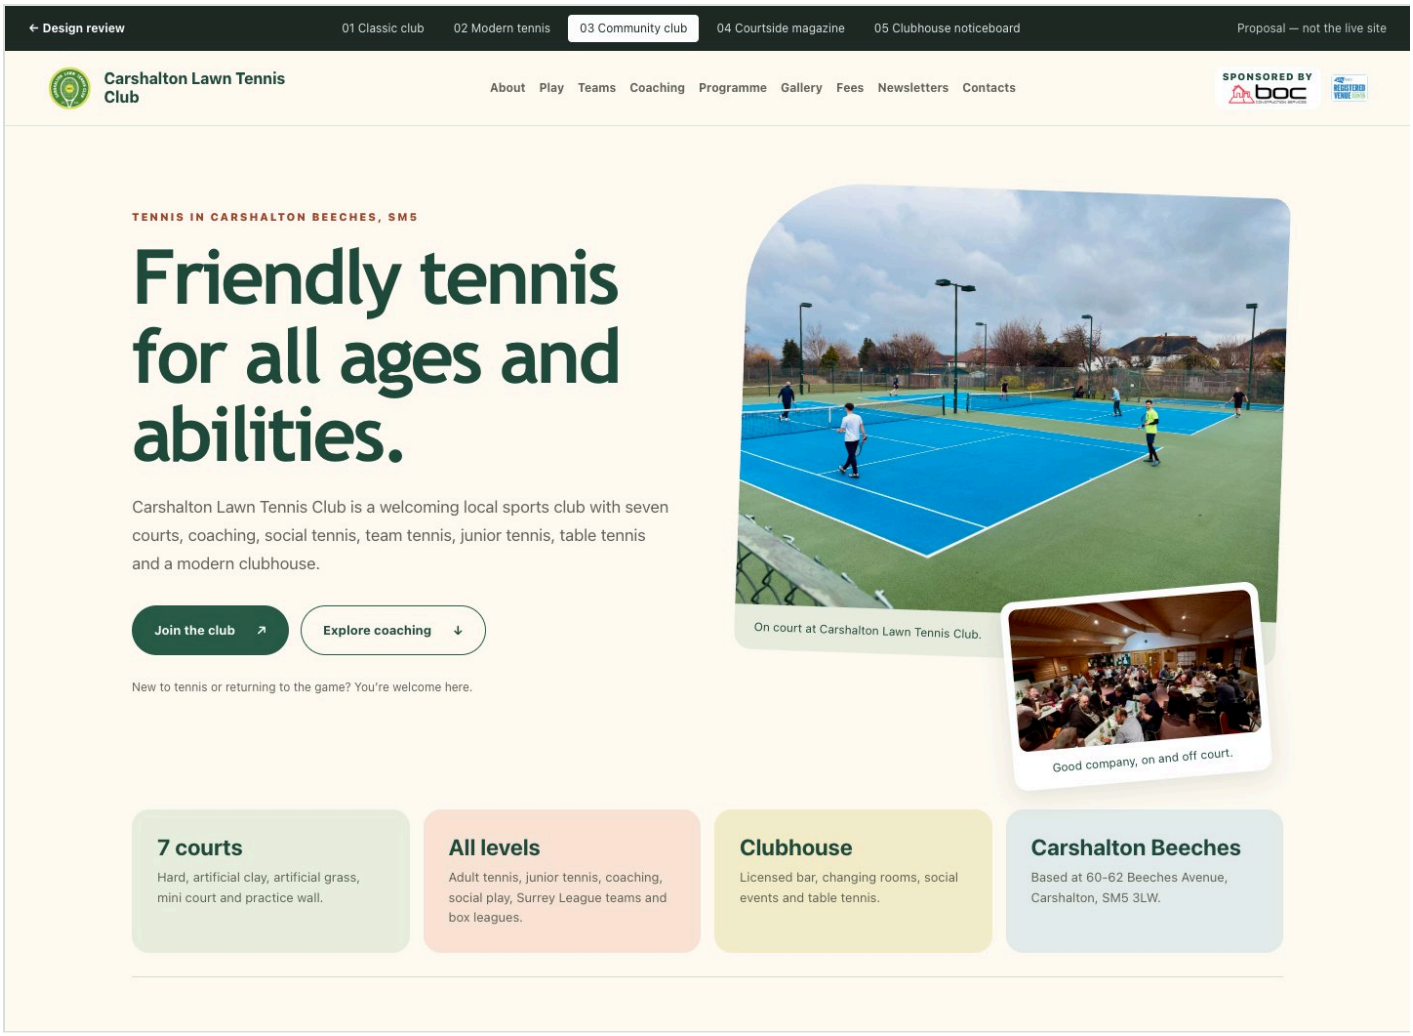

Best if we want...

A strong first impression and a contemporary identity centred on playing, improving and joining.

Trade-off

More assertive. The image overlay needs care to keep text readable, and strong photography matters.

For discussion: Is this exciting and inclusive, or does it feel too performance-focused? What would you keep or change?

03 / WARM · WELCOMING · SOCIABLE

Community club

An approachable local club, with life off court part of the story.

The look

Warm cream, soft green and peach, rounded panels, friendly typography and a tennis-and-clubhouse photo collage.

The layout

A welcoming split opening, colourful facts tiles, wider two-column play cards and softer coaching and junior panels.

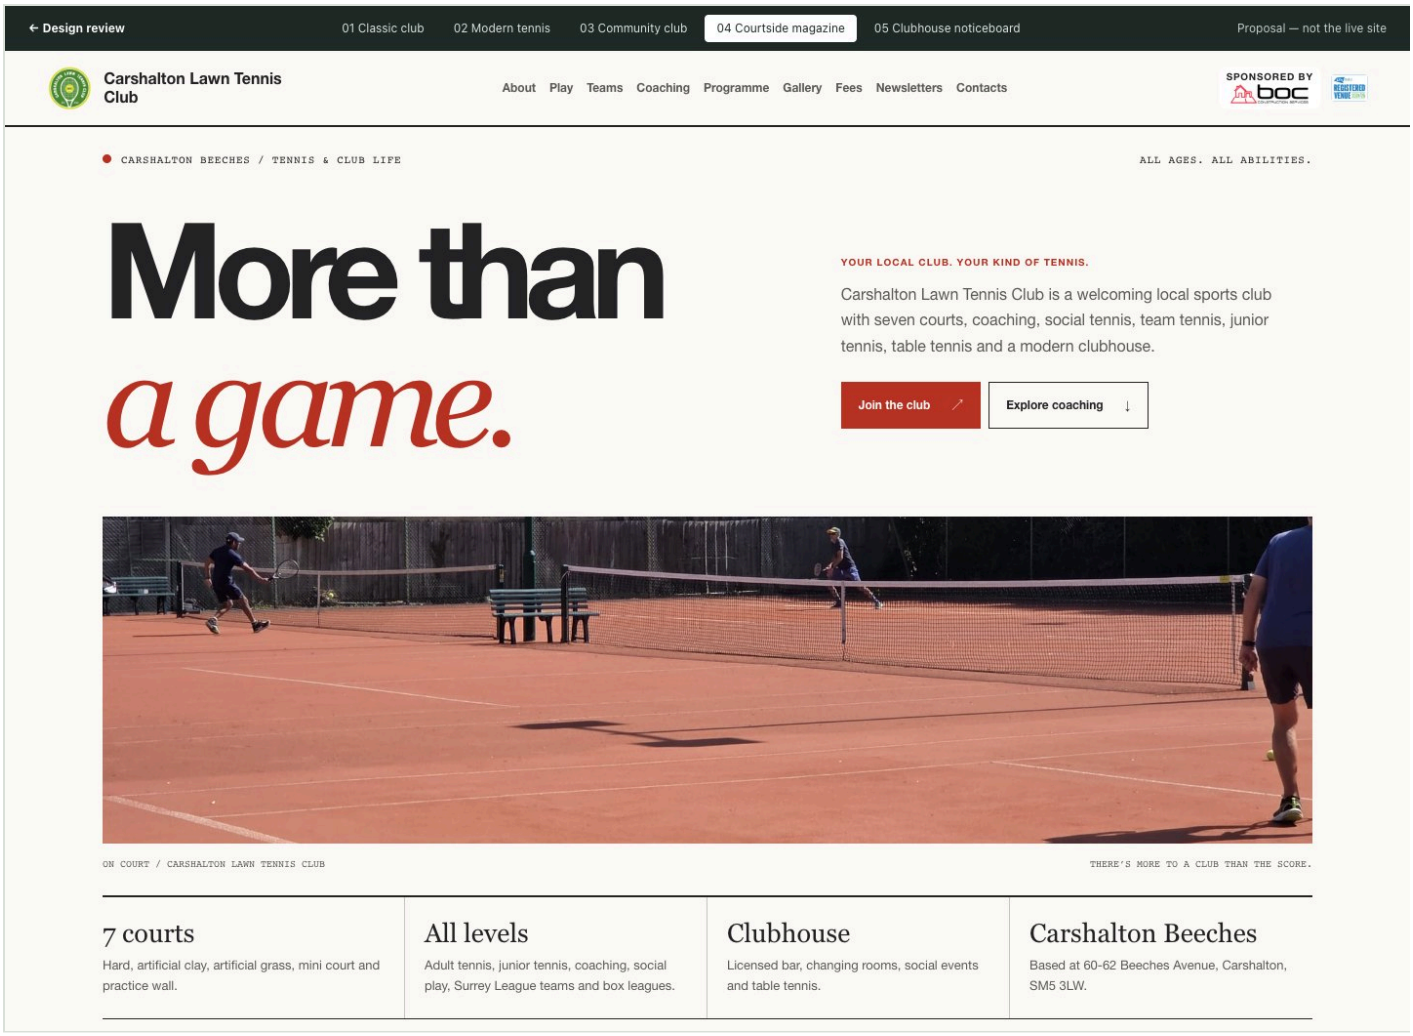

Best if we want...

Beginners, families and social players to feel that there is a place for them here.

Trade-off

A softer sporting identity. Competitive tennis needs to remain prominent further down the page.

For discussion: Does this capture our community without understating the tennis? What would you keep or change?

04 / EXPRESSIVE · EDITORIAL · UNEXPECTED

Courtside magazine

A local sporting institution, presented like an independent magazine.

The look

Ink and vermilion, oversized mixed typography, panoramic photography and strong editorial rules.

The layout

A headline-led opening, numbered activity rows, stripped-back coach profiles and pricing. Far fewer boxed cards.

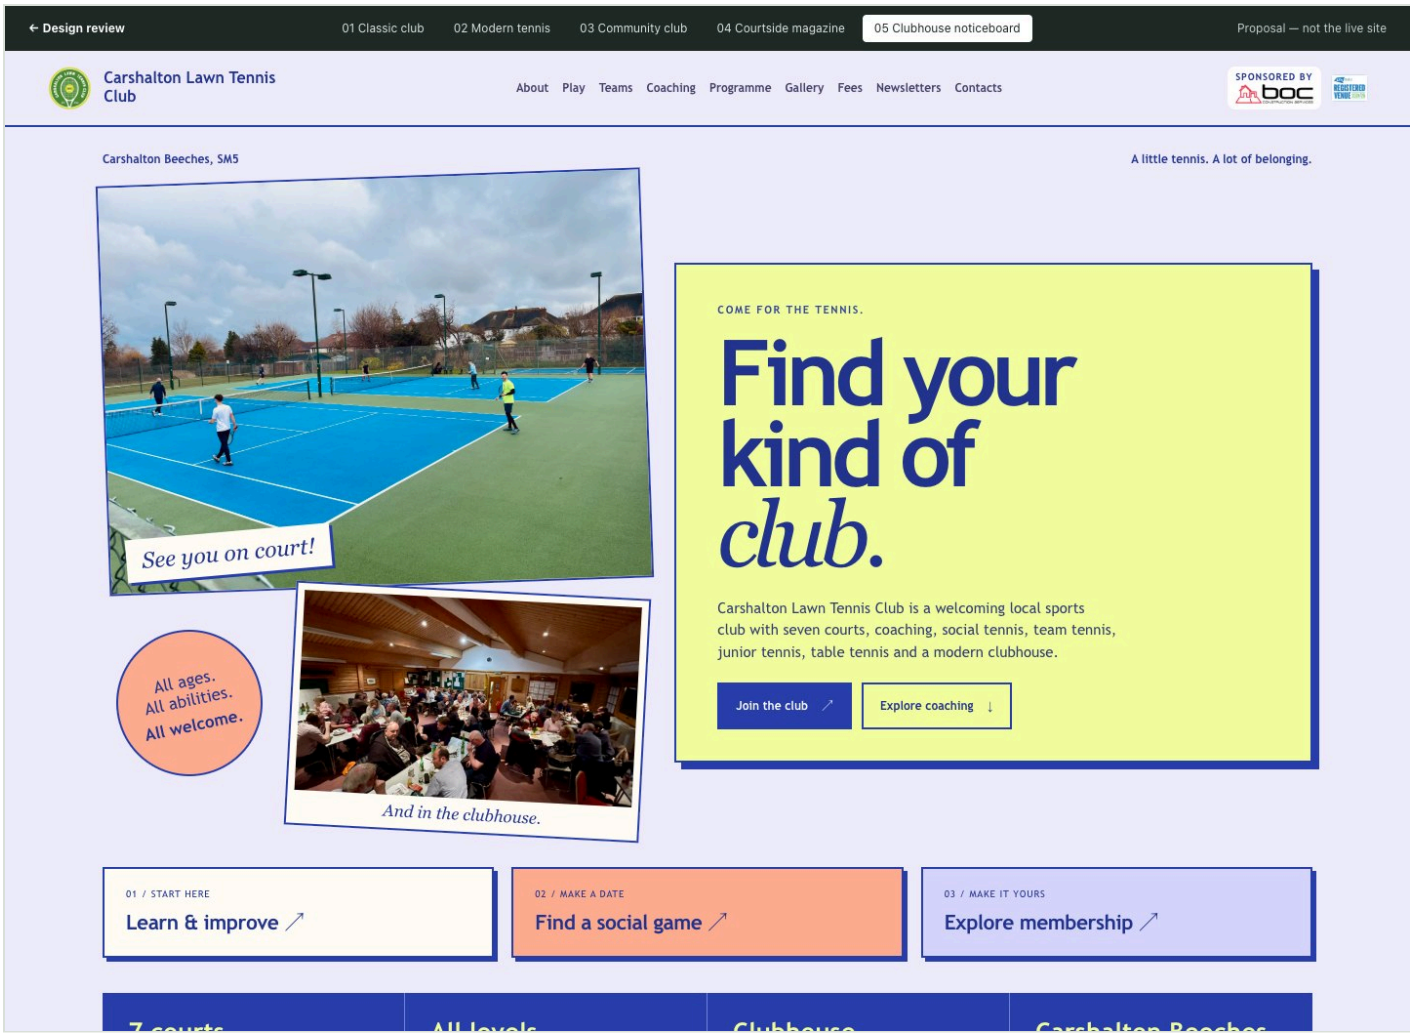

Best if we want...

A confident, distinctive identity that reflects the club's character and life beyond the courts.

Trade-off

Less conventional as a tennis website. Needs good photography and disciplined writing to stay sharp.

For discussion: Does this feel distinctive and confident, or too much like a magazine? What would you keep or change?

05 / PLAYFUL · GRAPHIC · FULL OF LIFE

Clubhouse noticeboard

A lively wall of club posters, translated into a usable website.

The look

Cobalt, lilac, lemon and coral. Off-centre photography, hard-edged poster blocks and solid offset shadows.

The layout

Coaching, social-play and membership shortcuts, colourful activity posters, a framed coaching area and a pinned-photo gallery.

Best if we want...

A people-led club with a sense of fun, where beginners and families feel welcome from the first screen.

Trade-off

More visually busy and a bigger departure from the existing identity. Practical information must remain easy to find.

For discussion: Is this welcoming and full of personality, or too playful? What would you keep or change?
